Before the Eagles even took the field to play the Cowboys, they watched two NFC East foes go to overtime. The Giants won and the Redskins blew a huge lead in their loss to the Saints. To read about how the Birds fared on Sunday night down in Dallas, head to Metro.us for full coverage.

TRUMP: I SHOULD HAVE LEFT UCLA PLAYERS IN JAIL

1 President Donald Trump said on Twitter on Sunday he should have left in jail the three UCLA basketball players who had been detained in China on suspicion of shoplifting after the father of one of the players questioned Trump's role in their release. "Now that the three basketball players are out of China and saved from years in jail, LaVar Ball, the father of LiAngelo, is unaccepting of what I did for his son and that shoplifting is no big deal. I should have left them in jail!," the president wrote. The three apologized last week and thanked Trump for helping secure their release by raising the issue with Chinese President Xi Jinping during his visit, in their first public comments since being detained.

TRUMP OPEN TO DROPPING HEALTHCARE PROVISION

2 President Donald Trump would not insist on including repeal of an Obama-era health insurance mandate in a bill intended to enact the biggest overhaul of the tax code since the 1980s, a senior White House aide said on Sunday. The version of tax legislation put forward by Senate Republican leaders would remove a requirement in former President Barack Obama's signature healthcare law that taxes Americans who decline to buy health insurance. "If we can repeal part of Obamacare as part of a tax bill ... that can pass, that's great," White House budget director Mick Mulvaney said on CNN's "State of the Union" on Sunday. "If it becomes an impediment to getting the best tax bill we can, then we are OK with taking it out," Mulvaney said.

BRITAIN TO SUBMIT 'BREXIT BILL' PROPOSAL

4 Britain will submit proposals on how to settle its divorce bill with the European Union before an EU summit next month and is expected to negotiate hard, finance minister Philip Hammond said. The EU told Prime Minister Theresa May on Friday that there was more work to be done to unlock the Brexit talks, repeating its early December deadline for her to flesh out Britain's opening offer on the financial settlement. "We will make our proposals to the European Union in time for the Council," Hammond told the BBC, referring to the Dec. 14-15 meeting of EU heads of government. He was speaking three days before he sets out Britain's budget plan, where he will have to find room within fiscal constraints to help May convince voters that the government is tackling domestic problems at the same time as negotiating its exit from the EU.

STORM COMPLICATES SEARCH FOR MISSING SUB

5 A storm on Sunday complicated the search for an Argentine navy submarine missing in the South Atlantic with 44 crew members, as authorities tried to verify that recent satellite calls seen as a sign the sailors were alive came from the vessel. U.S. airplanes carrying subsurface search specialists arrived in Argentina to help hunt for the ARA San Juan, which was 268 miles off Argentina's coast when its location was last known early on Wednesday, said navy Admiral Gabriel Gonzalez. More than a dozen boats and aircraft from Argentina, the United States, Britain, Chile and Brazil had joined the effort. Authorities have mainly been scanning the sea from above as waves of up to 26 feet and winds of up to 40 knots made the search difficult for boats, Gonzalez told reporters.

INJURED BY A DRUNK DRIVER?

How Extensive Is The Problem Of Drunk Driving In Pennsylvania?

Very - according to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation statistics from 2014, more than10,000 accidents were related to alcohol: 28% of the traffic deaths were alcohol-related, and 9% of all reported car crashes were also alcohol-related.

What Are The Dram Shop Laws In Pennsylvania?

It is unlawful to furnish alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person. A business that holds a liquor license, i.e. a bar or social club, can be held liable if any of its servers or bartenders serve alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person who upon leaving the establishment goes on to cause an accident causing injuries.

Who Could Be Held Liable In A Dram Shop Case?

In any kind of alcohol-related accident, obviously the intoxicated driver can be responsible for driving while intoxicated, but any liquor licensee, that is a bar, a social club or anyone holding a liquor license issued by the state, can be held accountable for furnishing, providing or selling liquor to a visibly intoxicated person, a minor or habitual drunkard, who then goes on to harm to others or even themselves.

The establishment itself, its owner, bartender and/or server, would be covered under the establishment's insurance policy, assuming they have one.

How Do Dram Shop Cases Differ From Personal Injury Claims?

In a typical personal injury case you must prove that somebody did something wrong or was negligent, i.e., breached, and secondly that the breach caused harm or injury. In a dram shop case you do not need to prove negligence or a breach of duty. There is strict statutory liability if you can establish that the drinking establishment provided alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person.

What Is The Statute Of Limitations In A Dram Shop Case?

There are no specific notice requirements to start a dram shop action. Generally, the statute of limitations for a dram shop case is the same as a personal injury case; two years from the date of injury. Now there are some exceptions to that rule. If a minor is injured, then there is more time for a claim to be brought on the minor's behalf. A minor has two years from the age of majority to bring a claim. In other words by the minor's 20th birthday.

Who Is Eligible To Bring A Claim In A Dram Shop Scenario?

A potentially injured innocent bystander, i.e. somebody driving another car, who is struck by a drunk driver, a pedestrian or a bicyclist, on the road struck by a drunk driver. It could be the passenger in the drunk driver's car. And believe it or not, it could even be the drunk driver, him or herself.

Jay-Z keeps fighting for Meek Mill with NYT op-ed slamming 'absurd' sentence

Hip-hop god weighs in on "absurdity" of rapper's recent re-imprisonment for probation violations.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Iconic rapper Jay-Z has emerged as one of the most vocal critics of Philly rapper Meek Mill's recent re-imprisonment on probation violations. He interrupted a recent concert in Dallas to address the case. And on Friday, Hova took the battle to another level when drew on his most fearsome instrument: the pen.

"Probation is a trap and we must fight for Meek and everyone else unjustly sent to prison," Jay-Z wrote in an op-ed published in The New York Times on Nov. 17.

Meek Mill remains imprisoned on a two- to four-year sentence for three recent probation violations, but over the weekend, he was moved into the general population at Camp Hill state prison, TMZ reported. He was previously isolated in "protective custody," which is used for high-profile inmates.

Rumors that the rapper would get an emergency bail hearing on Monday, Nov. 20, were proven false, and based on a clerical error. Meek's defense attorney, Joe Tacopina, recently told Metro he is seeking new bail and filing for reconsideration of the sentence, in addition to demanding Meek's judge be recused from the case.

But in his op-ed, Jay-Z targeted the entire probation system. He wrote that some 4.65 million Americans are on parole or probation, and one-third of them are black.

"What's happening to Meek Mill is just one example of how our criminal justice system entraps and harasses hundreds of thousands of black people every day," Jigga wrote.

Jay-Z is the owner of a Roc Nation management, which has recently paid for billboards and a bus circling Center City with the message "Stand with Meek Mill," urging fans to sign the Justice4Meek.com petition.

Jay-Z said Meek's case reminds him of his experiences growing up in Brooklyn in the '70s and '80s, where probation was a "land mine, with a random misstep bringing consequences greater than the crime."

Meek Mill, 31, born Robert Rihmeek Williams, remains on probation for a 2008 gun possession case for which he previously served eight months in prison. His original sentence came with five years of probation, but it was prolonged due to previous probation violations that saw him jailed for five months in 2014 and on house arrest for 90 days the following year.

Two weeks ago, Judge Genece Brinkley ordered him to serve two to four years for the three recent violations.

Meek's lawyers say the recent violations were minor — two of them involve arrests for which the original charges were dropped – and have also accused Brinkley of harboring a personal vendetta against the rapper (the judge has not commented on those allegations).

But Jay-Z's op-ed links the case to the systemic mass incarceration of African-Americans and other people of color in the U.S.: "The specifics of Meek's case inspired me to write this. But it's time we highlight the random ways people trapped in the criminal justice system are punished every day," he wrote. "The system treats them as a danger to society, consistently monitors and follows them for any minor infraction — with the goal of putting them back in prison."

Jay-Z sponsored the "Stand With Meek Mill" bus, seen around Philly. EVAN MACY

Foster child placed in West Philly 'house of horrors' wins $11 million in lawsuit

New details emerge about infamous West Philly foster father.

sam.newhouse@metro.us

Walter Scott, 63, has been inmate #MK5319 since his 2015 conviction on multiple charges of sexually abusing children, and is currently serving his 20-year sentence at the state correctional facility in Graterford.

But new details are only now coming to light about what exactly transpired inside Scott's West Philly home, which was once a government-sanctioned foster home for children in need.

"It was a house of horrors," said attorney Nadeem Bezar, of Kline & Spector P.C., who last week along with co-counsel Emily Marks won an $11 million verdict on behalf of Scott's adopted daughter, who came forward in 2015 after she saw Scott charged with abusing other children.

"The Scotts actually adopted this child," Bezar said. "It's just that much more disgusting and torturous, to say, 'I want to take you, I'm going to give you my name,' while this man is doing these horrible things."

The victim, now 23, was 6 in 2000 when she was placed in Scott's home. By the age of 10, she was had been raped by Scott, Bezar said.

The victim only remembers three separate assaults, Bezar said, and survived 12 more years in Scott's Florence Street home the age of 18.

She also experienced emotional abuse during her time there, Bezar said. Scott and his wife verbally abused her, at some points packing her possessions and threatening to throw her out of their home.

Attorney Nadeem Bezar, of Kline & Specter PC, just won an $11M verdict for a woman who was abused as a child by her adoptive parents. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Bezar said despite "obvious tension between the child and her foster mother," physical punishment and signs of abuse, the victim was adopted by the Scotts with the approval of Bethanna, the foster care agency which originally placed the victim with Scott. Bethanna said it is "saddened" by the abuse in this case and said "litigation is ongoing." They noted that jurors only found the agency 10 percent at fault, and asserted their staff had "no knowledge whatsoever of these terrible incidents."

Bezar said social workers missed signs of sexual abuse, including bed-wetting, regression in speech and behavior, and a sexual "acting out" incident involving touching a boy.

The jury ordered the $11 million verdict ($10 million compensatory and $1 million punitive damages) against Scott, who is not believed to have substantial assets, and Bethanna, which since 2015 has been a "community umbrella agency" (CUA) contracted by Philadelphia' Department of Human Services (DHS) to provide foster care and other social services. In DHS' recent public CUA "scorecard," Bethanna, which is licensed by the state, received the worst score of all 10 CUAs: a grade of a "D," and a ranking of 10th.

"Philadelphia DHS monitors all CUAs for quality of child welfare practice," DHS spokeswoman Heather Keafer stated. "If CUAs do not show improvement over time, then Philadelphia DHS will evaluate their ability to continue contracting with Philadelphia DHS to provide child welfare case management."

Keafer said the state's Department of Human Services licenses foster homes and is responsible for investigating allegations of wrongdoing.

"We are saddened to learn about this incident which occurred in 2000," Keafer said via email about the recent case. "When Philadelphia DHS is alerted by the state about issues with a foster home, we immediately take the appropriate steps to ensure the safety of children in its care."

British bakery Greggs replaces baby Jesus with sausage roll and people are upset

Greggs has apologized for the controversial image. TWITTER

British bakery Greggs has apologized after the company replaced baby Jesus with a sausage roll in a recent Christmas calendar advertisement.

Greggs, one of the largest bakeries in Britain, released an image of the Nativity scene featuring three wise men, but instead of baby Jesus being the main focal point of the iconic religious scene, the bakery replaced him with a sausage roll on a manger filled with hay.

While many people recognized their ad simply as a humorous way to promote the popular food item during the holiday season, some Christians were offended by the image, claiming it's a mockery to their religion. Some have gone so far as to call for a boycott.

Those who were upset with Greggs for posting the image took to Twitter to air their grievances.

Simon Richards, CEO of The Freedom Association — a libertarian pressure group called Greggs "sick" and said they would "never dare insult other religions" in a post on Twitter. He also suggested they should donate their proceeds to Britain's Salvation Army.

Rev. Mark Edwards of St. Matthew's church in Dinnington and St. Cuthbert's church in Brunswick, U.K., thinks the ad is "disrespectful" and Greggs was using a religious image for commercial purposes.

"It goes beyond just commercialism, it's showing a total disregard and disrespect towards one of the greatest stories ever told," Edwards said to the Chronicle.

"To replace Jesus with a half-eaten sausage roll is just going to the lowest common denominator," he added.

Some recognized Greggs' attempt at being funny and decided to (sausage) roll with it.

Greggs apologized for the image.

"We're really sorry to have caused any offense, this was never our intention," a Greggs spokesman said. LENYON WHITAKER

Newly developed robot does backflip in viral video

The human-looking robot landed a perfect backflip in the latest clip from the robotics company Boston Dynamics.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

When you picture what the future will look like, you surely see a world full of robots. But did you ever imagine those robots doing backflips?

Boston Dynamics, a company that says it is "changing your idea of what robots can do," is responsible for the Atlas, a robot that basically resembles a human figure in a space suit. The company describes it as "the world's most dynamic humanoid." The robot walks on two legs and keeps its balance even when jostled or pushed, and can even get itself back up if tipped all the way over.

The Atlas robot is the star of a video that has gone viral. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Now, the Atlas can also do backflips.

Boston Dynamics posted a new video on Thursday to its YouTube page titled, simply, "What's new, Atlas?" The barely one-minute-long video shows the human-esque robot jumping onto blocks, jumping and spinning around, and ultimately landing a backflip, even raising its robot arms at the end like a mechanical gymnast.

Though Atlas' skills are interesting, previous popular videos of the robot have also shown its fails, because who doesn't like to see a robot fall over or make mistakes? Maybe witnessing a robot fall helps stymie the fear of their eventual world domination. And of course, a perfect backflip takes a few tries, so this video is no different.

Boston Dynamics began as a spin-off from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, according to the company's site.

It's responsible for the first-ever robots that "ran and maneuvered like animals," and plans to take the next robotic step forward to combine dynamic control and balance with "cutting-edge" electronics and software that allows for "perception, navigation and intelligence."

Meaning, of course, that this is not the last robot innovation we'll see from the company.

Roy Moore has been accused of sexual misconduct by multiple women. GETTY IMAGES

TRUMP'S AMERICA

TRUMP'S TWITTER SILENCE ON TEEN DATER ROY MOORE

We'd all been waiting for this with no expectation that it would ever arrive: The topic so explosive it could make Donald Trump's Twitter thumb go suddenly numb.

It wasn't Russian hacking to steal the 2016 election. He's been tweeting like a madman denying that. It wasn't the threat of nuclear annihilation from North Korea or even the release of three UCLA basketball players after a Beijing shoplifting arrest.

"I should have left them in jail!" the petulant president click-click-clicked on Sunday afternoon, his nose out of joint because one player's father wasn't thankful enough.

But where are Trump's tweets on the teen-dating Republican nominee in the Alabama senate race? The abhorrent Roy Moore (R-Pedophilia) has been reviled and defended from Boulder to Birmingham and back again. He's been at the top of social media trending lists for two weeks now. And yet not a single Twitter character has carried the famous account name @realdonaldtrump.

What gives?

What has silenced the unsilenceable tweeter? Does he harbor some secret affection for the commandment-eschewing Ten Commandments judge? Is Trump still smarting at the defeat of his preferred candidate in September's Republican primary, sitting GOP Sen. Luther "Not Nearly So" Strange? Is Trump loath to risk comparisons with his own chorus of female accusers?

So many questions, so few days until Alabamians vote on Dec. 12.

Clearly, it isn't just senatorial sex the president is shying away from. He made time for a vicious Twitter rant against Democratic Sen. "Al Frankenstein," who had just apologized for a single act of sexual misconduct. But still not a peep about the allegedly recidivist teen-girl molester who could soon be joining Mitch McConnell's majority.

Legislative Affairs Director Marc Short noted on ABC that Trump hadn't campaigned for Moore in Alabama. Press secretary Sarah Sanders noted that the White House did put out a (mild) statement while Trump was in Asia, urging Moore to step aside IF THE ALLEGATIONS ARE TRUE. But even that was quickly followed by the classic Washington dodge: "The people of Alabama know best what to do," Short said.

Which is all very strange. Now that Twitter's allowing 280 characters, you'd think he'd have twice as much to say.

Metro columnist Ellis Henican is the best-selling author of a dozen books, including "TRUMPITUDE: The Secret Confessions of Donald's Brain," which hits stores next week. Follow him on Twitter @henican.

Merkel's fourth term in doubt after would-be partner pulls out

German Chancellor Angela Merkel's efforts to form a three-way coalition government that would secure her a fourth term hit a major setback on Sunday after a would-be coalition partner pulled out of exploratory talks, citing irreconcilable differences.

The pro-business Free Democrats (FDP) unexpectedly walked out of the talks with Merkel's conservatives and the Greens, saying that the three parties could not find compromises on key issues like immigration and the environment.

Merkel could seek to form a minority government with the Greens, or new elections will be called.

"Today there was no progress but rather there were setbacks because targeted compromises were questioned," FDP leader Christian Lindner told reporters. "It is better not to rule than to rule falsely. Goodbye!"

Merkel was weakened after an election in September as voters angry with her decision in 2015 to open Germany's borders to more than a million asylum seekers punished her conservatives by voting for the Alternative for Germany (AfD) far-right party.

There is little appetite for a second vote, especially as the main parties fear that the populist AfD would win more than the almost 13 percent of votes it secured in September.

Failure to form a government in Europe's largest economy could have implications for everything from euro zone reforms to European Union policy on Russia and Turkey.

Merkel has used her power to broker compromises on Greece within the single currency bloc and to keep in place EU sanctions against Russia over its backing of separatists in eastern Ukraine.

With little progress, NAFTA talks said to be running risk of stalemate

Time is running short to reach a deal before the March 2018 start of Mexico's presidential elections.

Talks to update the North American Free Trade Agreement appeared to be in danger of grinding toward a stalemate amid complaints of U.S. negotiators' inflexibility, people familiar with the process said on Sunday.

The United States, Canada and Mexico are holding the fifth of seven planned rounds of talks to modernize NAFTA, which President Donald Trump blames for job losses and big trade deficits for the U.S.

"The talks are really not going anywhere," Jerry Dias, president of Unifor, the largest Canadian private-sector union, told reporters after meeting with Canada's chief negotiator on Sunday.

"As long as the United States is taking the position they are, this is a colossal waste of time," said Dias, who is advising the government and regularly meets the Canadian team.

Hanging over the negotiations is the very real threat that Trump could make good on a threat to scrap NAFTA.

Canada and Mexico object to a number of demands the U.S. side unveiled during the fourth round last month, including for a five-year sunset clause that would force frequent renegotiation of the trade pact, far more stringent automotive content rules and radical changes to dispute settlement mechanisms.

"Our internal view as of this morning is that if any progress is to be made, the United States needs to show some flexibility and a willingness to do a deal," said a Canadian source with knowledge of the talks.

"We are seeing no signs of flexibility now," added the source, who requested anonymity given the sensitivity of the situation.

However, a NAFTA country official familiar with the talks said Canada had not yet submitted any counterproposals to the U.S. demands.

Dias said the United States was showing some signs of flexibility over its sunset clause proposal after Mexican officials floated a plan for a "rigorous evaluation" of the trade pact, but without an automatic expiration.

U.S. negotiating objectives that were updated on Friday appeared to accommodate the Mexican proposal, saying the revised NAFTA should "provide a mechanism for ensuring that the Parties assess the benefits of the Agreement on a periodic basis."

Canada and Mexico are also unhappy about U.S. demands that half the content of North American-built autos come from the United States, coupled with a much higher 85 percent North American content threshold. Officials are due to discuss the issue from Sunday through the end of the fifth round on Tuesday.

Flavio Volpe, president of the Canada's Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association, said there was little chance of making substantial progress on autos in Mexico City, as the U.S. demands were still not fully understood.

"I don't expect a heavy negotiation here," he said in an interview on the sidelines of the talks. REUTERS

Want a healthier heart? Get a puppy

A study shows that a dog drops the risk of dying from cardiovascular disease by one-third.

MEAGAN MORRIS
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

We've got good news if you want a puppy for Christmas, but your partner just isn't that into the idea.

A new study by researchers at Uppsala University in Sweden found that bringing a new little furball into your life can improve your heart health, especially if you live alone. The reason: A dog forces you into more activity — he needs walks, after all! Little Fido also gives you some much-needed social interaction if you live alone.

"A very interesting finding in our study was that dog ownership was especially prominent as a protective factor in persons living alone, which is a group reported previously to be at higher risk of cardiovascular disease and death than those living in a multiperson household," lead study author Mwenya Mubanga, a doctoral student in the Department of Medical Sciences at Uppsala University in Sweden, said in a statement.

For the study, Mubanga and team used data from the Sweden's Register of the Total Population to evaluate the heart health of more than 3.4 million Swedes between 40 and 80 years old over 12 years (from 2001 to 2013).

The results? Dog owners — especially dog owners who lived alone — had a lower risk of dying from cardiovascular disease. Even more interesting: Owners of breeds like terriers, retrievers and scent hounds were even less likely to develop heart disease.

"Perhaps a dog may stand in as an important family member in the single households," Mubanga said in the statement. "The results showed that single dog owners had a 33 percent reduction in risk of death and 11 percent reduction in risk of cardiovascular disease during follow-up compared to single non-owners."

There are some limitations to the data, though.

"There might … be differences between [dog] owners and non-owners already before buying a dog, which could have influenced our results, such as those people choosing to get a dog tending to be more active and of better health," Tove Fall, senior study author and associate professor of epidemiology at Uppsala University, said in the statement.

While that might be true, there are enough other benefits to dog ownership to make it worth it. Dog owners are shown to be less depressed and make friends easier, according to a recent study. The reason? It gets you out into the community — and you're more likely to talk to other dog owners.

"Dog owners in particular tend to be a little more extroverted, or outgoing," Kay Joubert, director of companion animal services at PAWS, told The Huffington Post.

"When you start to engage them about their companion animal, people tend to open up and really blossom. They want to share stories about their favorite friend."

Another small study found that people who walked dogs five times a week lost an average of 14.4 pounds over a year, which also helps heart health.

So go ahead, get that dog. Your heart — and your waistline — will thank you.

Research has shown a link between dog ownership and heart health. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Mugabe defies demands to quit as Zimbabwe's leader after party fires him

Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe on Sunday defied his own ZANU-PF party and hundreds of thousands of protesters demanding his resignation by pledging in a television address to preside over the party's next congress in December.

Two sources — one a senior member of the government, the other familiar with talks with military leaders — had told Reuters Mugabe would use the address to announce his resignation after ZANU-PF earlier sacked him as its leader in a step precipitated by an army takeover four days earlier.

But in the speech from his official residence, sitting alongside a row of generals, Mugabe acknowledged criticisms from ZANU-PF, the military and the public, but made no mention of his own position.

ZANU-PF had given the 93-year-old, who led his country to independence in 1980, less than 24 hours to quit as head of state or face impeachment, an attempt to secure a peaceful end to his tenure after a de facto military coup.

The leader of Zimbabwe's liberation war veterans said impeachment plans would now go ahead.

Over the weekend, hundreds of thousands took to the streets of the capital Harare to celebrate Mugabe's downfall and hail a new era for their country. REUTERS

Celebrity doppelgängers who kind of look alike

Ah, Hollywood: a place where people, held to the highest standard of beauty, get together and create. But that's the thing: When you get a bunch of beautiful people together, chances are, they're going to look alike. So these commonly agreed upon celebrity doppelgangers should come as no surprise at all.

Here's a list of celebrities that look so much alike, it's like "Wow, you two kind of look alike if I squint just so!" METRO

The 'Search Party' guide to getting

Dory and Drew aren't taking the let's-cover-up-an-accidental-murder thing too well this season. Can you blame them? TBS

How to cover it up, and cope. Or at least, try to.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

"Search Party" is back! And in the second season, the TBS series gets darker — and more delightful — than before.

Thankfully, it show still manages its fresh (yet painfully familiar) take on self-obsessed millennials. But this time, it's with a good dosing of murder.

To be clear, we are not condoning murder. Reader, do not do murder! Still, with the first episode of the second season having premiered on Sunday, Nov. 19, we thought it would be a great idea to see just how these oblivious millennials — Dory, Drew, Elliott and Portia — managed to get away with, well, murder. So far, at least. There's no telling how much longer they'll be able to keep it together.

Here's a step-by-step guide to getting away with murder, with tips and tricks from the "Search Party" premiere.

First things first: Freak the f—k out.

This one should come naturally. Dory opens the episode with a panic attack that promises she'll likely suffer PTSD from this incident, forever and always. Drew — king of freakouts — is right there with her. But Elliott has a, dare we say, unnatural calmness about him. What's that about?

Now, let's pretend like everything is fine.

That's right: It's probably because he's so busy pretending everything is fine, and acting like nothing has happened. Even if there is a body folded up in the closet, he's going to take up Chantal's offer for a dinner out in Montreal, you know?

away with literal murder

The gang's all here. And they're all complicit, too! TBS

You deserve a break, so stand by while your friends have a dance party.
It kind of makes sense that Chantal — the very reason the gang is in this mess — is the worst. So of course, as clueless as she is, she's all about snorting cocaine and having a dance party for her last night of escapism. It's even less surprising that Dory, Drew and Elliott stand by, incapable of participating. I mean, they literally just killed a guy!

You'll need supplies to bury the body.
Maybe don't opt for the zebra-print suitcase, though. That's a bad choice on Dory and Drew's part.

Back to work: Manipulate everyone around you.
Elliott's preternatural calm is kind of disturbing, no? That, plus his effortless ability to manipulate Portia, hot French-Canadian Matthieu and Chantal — the latter with the promises of the ol' Sleeping Beauty (a sedative high kicked off by the aforementioned cocaine) — is extremely worrisome. Surely, though, he won't be able to keep it up for long. If he does, he might end up being the most sociopathic of the four.

Apologize, a lot.
Dory apologizes to the gang — including Portia, who is feeling left out of the let's-cover-up-an-accidental-murder plot — for dragging them into finding Chantal and covering up Keith's murder. Then she remembers Keith had a daughter and realizes that hey, maybe she's the worst, not Chantal. Even though, again, Chantal is pretty horrible.

Make an even worse decision, if you can help it.
After an accidental murder, you're bound to make one, two or several poor decisions. But Dory stealing Keith's phone is probably the worst decision of all. We'll see!

The tunes in 'Three Billboards' that change everything

Woody Harrelson as a hardened local sheriff. FOX SEARCHLIGHT

Metro deep dives into the score behind the latest Frances McDormand and Woody Harrelson film.

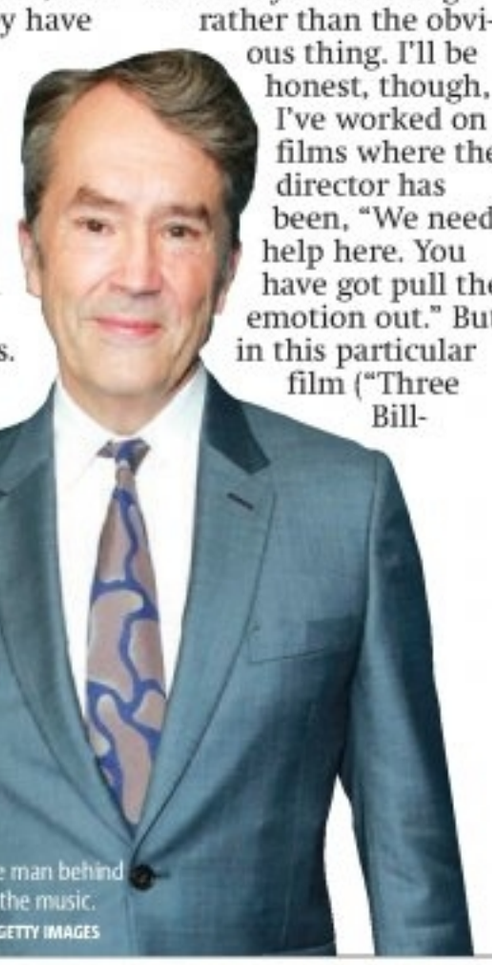
GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroPhilly
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

Cinematic sound is just as powerful as the script in many cases. And the supreme court on soundtracks has one clear-cut judge and jury: Carter Burwell is the master of music for more than a dozen Coen Brothers films. He's also worked with Bill Condon, David Mamet, Todd Haynes, Stephen Frears, Spike Jonze, David O. Russell, Mike Nichols, Doug Liman, Sidney Lumet, Charlie Kaufman and more. So what makes one project different from another?

We threw on a headset and hit the studio, so to speak, with Burwell in order to find out.

How do you differentiate between soundtracks?

They're each very individual. You always try to have the music be about the film. When the films are so different that makes it easier; it's harder when they have things in common. Putting aside the stories they're individual in every possible way, in story and in sensibilities, and in how they appeal to audiences. Something I try to achieve is not just mirroring the things that you see on the screen and just amplifying them emotionally — that's one thing that music can do, but I try not to do that. I try to find another aspect of what you're seeing rather than the obvious thing. I'll be honest, though, I've worked on films where the director has been, "We need help here. You have got pull the emotion out." But in this particular film ("Three Billboards"), we were always trying to do the opposite because the story is so infused with emotion.



The man behind the music. GETTY IMAGES

"Three Billboards Outside Ebbing, Missouri" uses a very beautiful song [Amy Annelle's cover of "Buckskin Stallion Blues"] right at the end. Did you discuss incorporating that song, or mirroring that song with your own music, with writer and director Martin McDonagh?

No, we didn't discuss it. I think when I started working on it the song wasn't in there yet. But we both love that Townes Van Zandt song. I wanted the score to feel like it was from that place in a sense. Like it was from the middle part of the United States, and the song has to feel like it is from there, too. But that wasn't a planned coincidence.

"Three Billboards" is playing in select cinemas now.

A working mother's guide to overthrowing the patriarchy jobs & education

Never underestimate the strength of a working mother. ISTOCK

Who says you can only be a "good mother" or a "good worker"?

PAT KING
@MetroPhilly
patrick.king@metro.us

The grossly outdated stereotype that says a woman can either have a family or a career is DOA.

Anyone who has ever met a new mom knows how strong, responsible and able to multitask she needs to be in order to keep a tiny human alive — why wouldn't she be able to keep a keen attention to detail in an office?

We spoke with entrepreneur and journalist Sarah Lacy about her book "A Uterus Is a Feature, Not a Bug: The Working Woman's Guide to Overthrowing the Patriarchy" to learn more about erasing this stigma and empowering women in the workforce and at home.

As a Silicon Valley journalist, Lacy was subject to more than her fair share of abuse at work (and let's be clear here — no one deserves any share of abuse in order to make a living) from men in the tech industry. But as she sees it, this toxic patriarchy has been in place for as long as the big businesses she covers have been in existence; it was only exacerbated when she became a mother.

"When I had children, I was stunned because I had spent my entire adult life being told that having children would make me distracted and weak and a worse employee, and I would have to make all of these compromises," says Lacy. "It was this biological distinction that would mean my years of high net worth were behind me."

So she decided to prove the patriarchy wrong.

"I couldn't believe the disconnect," Lacy continues. "What explains the intensity and pervasiveness of this lie? What explains why we believe it, and what explains the reality I found on the other side? As a reporter, I wanted to explore all of those things; as a woman, I want women to know that this isn't some death sentence."

What's the state of feminism in 2017? Good question — it means something different to every woman, regardless of her desire to have a family. That said, "I'm 41, and most women in my generation haven't wanted to be considered only 'feminists,' or only 'women,'" Lacy shares. "I would go to interview a prominent woman in Silicon Valley and if I were even to ask her a question about being a mother, about being a woman, or if she had encountered bias ever, I would be thrown out of her office. Women of my generation who were pioneers of this industry didn't want to be considered as women or supporting women, or to have anything to do with that narrative. Now, these same women are our most staunch and fearless advocates."

She's proud of her peers for finally taking a stand, blown away by how galvanized millennial feminists are, and can't help but feel optimistic for the future. "Everything everyone has been saying for years about why millennials are so awful — they don't have a culture of paying their dues — that's great!" Lacy beams. "Because the culture of paying our dues was exactly why women of my generation weren't speaking out about stuff like this."

Why you need to quit your job ... TODAY

Logothetis on his yellow motorcycle. ALL PHOTOS SW PUBLIC RELATIONS

Leon Logothetis from Netflix's "The Kindness Diaries" explains.

PATRICK KING
@MetroNewYork
patrick.king@metro.us

We all have a laundry list of things we'd much rather do than toil away to pay the rent. Unfortunately, rent ain't cheap, and perks like food and heating aren't free, either. But with Thanksgiving right around the corner, it's a good time to take stock of the bounty we have, and what we could potentially be doing for others.

That inclination inspired author and TV personality Leon Logothetis to hand in his notice, jump on a motorcycle and film "The Kindness Diaries," which aired on Netflix and has just been picked up for another season in 2018. Logothetis spent years as a successful stockbroker in London only to find money didn't bring him happiness. "On the outside, I pretty much had everything, in a materialistic sense," he says, "but on the inside, I had not too much at all. I was very depressed, very disconnected and really didn't have any sense of purpose. I felt, in many ways, I was wearing a mask."

After seeing the film adaptation of "The Motorcycle Diaries," about the travels of a young Che Guevara, Logothetis decided to quit his job and hit the road. "It was really a tipping point," he shares, and "it pushed me over the edge … in a good way."

His plan was to plot a road trip across America — living on $5 a day and relying on the kindness of strangers along the way. The trip was everything he could have hoped for, but however large the initial stack of fivers was, it eventually ran out. So he went on to work as a television producer in Hollywood. After a few years, he noticed himself falling back into the same habits as his broker days, and needed to break free once again.

Logothetis playing cricket in India.

"I was walking down the street near Hollywood Boulevard," he remembers, "and I saw this homeless chap who had a sign that said 'Kindness is the best medicine.' There was something about that sign that just touched me in a profound way."

He quit this job (again), bought a vintage yellow motorcycle with a passenger car, and set back out on the road — this time with the mission to help others. He made it a point that for every act of kindness received, he would return the favor by giving that unsuspecting stranger a life-changing gift. While in Pittsburgh, a homeless man helped Logothetis find shelter and food for the night; in exchange, Logothetis offered to send the man to culinary school and set him up in an apartment. "I call them 'gifts,' but really they're opportunities," he says. "I gave him an opportunity, and it's up to him what he does with that opportunity."

After writing a book about his experiences, he was approached by Netflix with the idea of turning 'The Kindness Diaries' into a show. The show was a hit, and Logothetis and his crew are preparing to start filming season two this January.

So what if you don't have the necessary means to make the same radical change? According to him, the answer is simple: "Ultimately, what defines us is how we show up in the world, and how we choose to treat ourselves, and how we treat each other. Does that mean that work isn't important? Of course not! But if all we do is work, and we don't help other people, then we're living a hollow life. Go out and make as much money as you can. But at the same time, change as many lives as you can by simply being kind."

What a perfect sentiment to write in your two-week notice!

76ers wild defeat to Warriors no big deal

The Sixers will be back in action at home Monday evening when the Jazz come to town for a 7 p.m. tip (on NBCSP). GETTY IMAGES

The Sixers are still growing, and blowing a big lead to one of the best teams of all time is not worth panicking over.

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

Saturday's sellout crowd of 20,848 was loud, Joel Embiid waved his hands to get them going and everything seemed rosy.

Then "The Process" suddenly came crashing to a halt and those same fans were fleeing for the exits in the waning minutes.

The 76ers played 24 spectacular minutes of basketball and 24 frustrating minutes of basketball all wrapped up in the same game against the defending champion Golden State Warriors.

Should it really be that stunning?

The Sixers are still very much a work-in-progress after 15 games with an 8-7 record. They're going to play very, very well at times. They're going to struggle at times. The passionate "Process" supporters don't seem to understand how vital on-court experience really can be.

Steph Curry (35 points) and Klay Thompson (17 points) didn't mesh in a limited amount of games together with the Warriors. They had seasons together.

In the first half, the Sixers couldn't miss. Every shot seemed to drop through the hoop.

The veteran-laden Warriors never panicked and had a third quarter to remember with 47 points. Curry alone scored 20 in the third.

The Sixers scored a total of 42 points in the second half. Their young standouts in Ben Simmons (23 points, 12 assists, eight rebounds) and Embiid (21 points and eight rebounds), performed at an extremely high level in large stretches. Then there were the other moments when they needed to step up and make something happen and it didn't take place.

These types of games will transpire this season. The Sixers are finally trending in the right direction, but they're far from a finished product.

"For us to stay sane, for us to be smart and move the program forward, we need to learn from this night, learn from what we did in the first half and not so well in the second half," Sixers coach Brett Brown said. "That's my move, that's my mindset. Our goal is to be a playoff team and we will take this and we will not have meltdowns. We will figure out how to move us forward. We ended this in a way we can educate and help our guys."

Whenever they lose a game, the Twitter world goes bonkers and calls for Brown to be fired. It's not a reasonable universe following a loss yet this young group is going to lose games.

This isn't the same franchise which won 75 games over the previous four seasons. There are players now with incredible ability. They will come together and win games this season. How many is anybody's best guess.

The Sixers are not ready to compete deep in the playoffs. They're not at the level of the Warriors.

"I mean, we can sit here and talk about the made shots and the offense and how they move the ball, but I'm more impressed by what they do defensively," Embiid said. "Especially for me, they had me guessing. I mean the double-team was coming the whole night from the top, from the baseline, from the post-fade, so they really had me guessing and I think that's what they do well. They play together and they've got each other's back and they play great defense."

The Sixers are also quite banged up with key role players such as Jerryd Bayless, Justin Anderson and Markelle Fultz out.

The future is quite bright. Will it ultimately result in a parade down Broad Street? Maybe.

Just not this season.

5 Free agent pitchers Phillies could target

Will the Phillies throw some money at a top-of-the-rotation starting pitcher?

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

The Phillies seem, more or less, content to promote from within — as it were — with regards to their position players.

From youngsters Rhys Hoskins, J.P. Crawford and Nick Williams to veterans Odubel Herrera and Freddy Galvis, it seems much more likely the Phillies spend their vast reserves of revenue on a starting pitcher or two.

Here is a look at some of the best matches for the team as the hot stove gets set to heat up this winter:

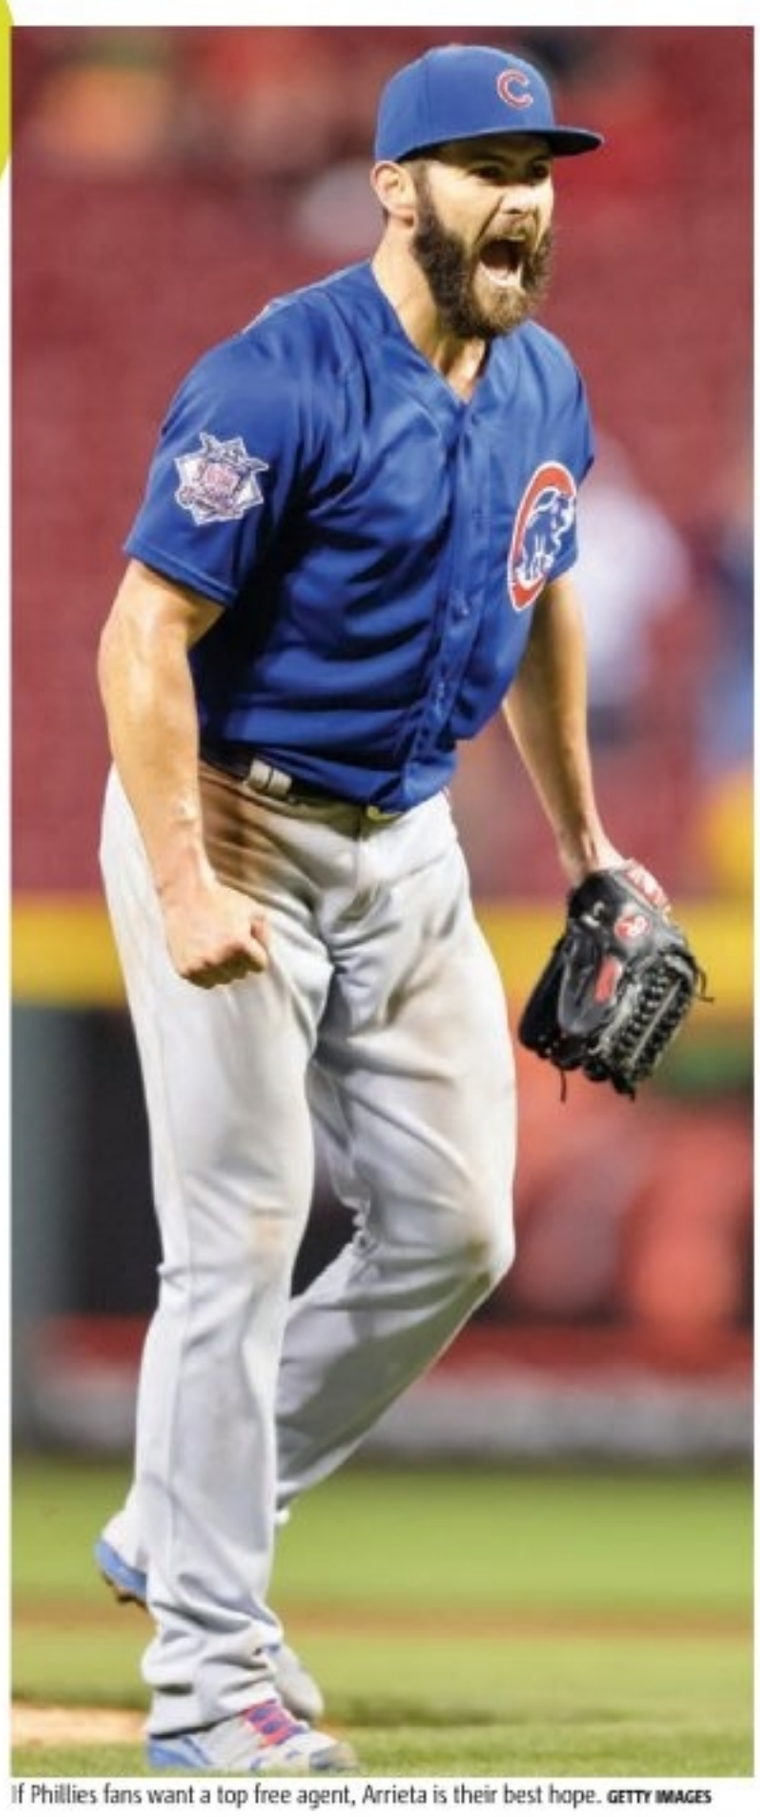
1 Jake Arrieta

The top dog is Yu Darvish, but all signs point to a huge contract from a contender for the Japanese ace. The Phillies could be active in pursuing the second best starter available in former Cy Young award winner and World Series champion Jake Arrieta. The righty will likely not return to his all-world form from a few seasons ago but is certainly worth an investment to be a top of the rotation arm and veteran presence in an up and coming locker room.

2 Lance Lynn

Lynn's career stats make him nearly as attractive an arm as Arrieta, but his pedigree could make him cheaper. Lynn is 72-47 with a 3.38 career ERA. At 30 years old, he still has some of his prime ahead of him, making him an awfully good fit for the Phillies.

3 Alex Cobb



If Phillies fans want a top free agent, Arrieta is their best hope. GETTY IMAGES

Cobb had a sky-high bright future with the Rays before needing Tommy John surgery a few years ago, but he has rebounded nicely after a 12-10 campaign with Tampa last year sporting a 3.66 ERA. Phillies newly hired manager Gabe Kapler has connections in Tampa, where he missed Cobb's debut in 2011 by one season.

4 Brandon Morrow

Morrow was a workhorse out of the bullpen for the Dodgers this postseason and had an impressive regular season too, winning all six decisions and posting an ERA of 2.06. He is a converted starter, but currently seems happy in his role as a reliever. Still, as seen with Pat Neshek last season, a top of the line arm can be a stabilizing force in a young bullpen.

5 Jaime Garcia

Garcia was a solid lefty-starter in St. Louis for several seasons before he was passed around the league in 2017, appearing in games for the Braves, Twins and Yankees and posting career worst numbers. That makes his value perfect for a low-risk environment like Philadelphia.

State of the Phillies rotation

If they don't sign a big-name free agent, here is what the Phillies pitching staff could look like in 2018 (stats from MLB last season).

1. Aaron Nola, RHP (12-11, 3.54 ERA)
2. Jerad Eickhoff, RHP (4-8, 4.71 ERA)
3. Nick Pivetta, RHP (8-10, 6.02 ERA)
4. Ben Lively, RHP (4-7, 4.26 ERA)
5. Mark Leiter Jr., RHP (3-6, 4.96 ERA)
Vince Velasquez (2-7, 5.13 ERA)
Jake Thompson (2-3, 2.88 ERA)
Tom Eshelman (13-3, 2.40 ERA in minors*)
Ricardo Pinto (1-2, 7.89 ERA)
Zach Eflin (1-5, 6.16 ERA)

Temple seniors still hoping to salvage season after disappointing home finale

The Owls can still become bowl eligible with a victory in their final game next week.

JON MARKS
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

Just one game remains on Temple's football schedule for 2017 — away at Tulsa next week. GETTY IMAGES

Throughout the day as Jullian Taylor, Sean Chandler, Sharif Finch and the rest of Temple's seniors tried in vain to make their final home game at Lincoln Financial Field one to remember as they had so many times before, the memories kept flooding back.

Like the day they finally knocked off Penn State, ending a 74- year string of futility. Or the night they were at the center of the college football world, putting their 7-0 record on the line against vaunted Notre Dame and having the Irish on the ropes much of the night before ultimately falling short. And there was also the night they beat up on UConn to clinch the 2015 American Athletic Conference Eastern Division title and earn a spot in the AAC's first title game.

They'd come so far from the time Matt Rhule — or in a few cases his predecessor Steve Addazio — had brought them to North Broad Street. And now, as they were systemically being dismantled by No. 15 ranked Central Florida, 45-19 Saturday, the realization this was their Linc swan song hit them hard.

"It's bittersweet," said Finch, a fifth year senior defensive end. "I know we gave it our all today but I know I'm never gonna [play again] in this stadium with my teammates. We had a lot of good times here. One of my best memories is winning the championship in 20015. Holding that trophy and seeing those faces of my teammates, knowing we were going to the first AAC championship game. When I got here I didn't know I'd be part of something special. I can't say I expected that."

Not many expected this Geoff Collins-led Temple team to repeat the first back-to-back 10-win seasons in school history. On the other hand to see the Owls stand 5-6 heading into their finale at Tulsa next Saturday wasn't counted on either.

It comes down to beating Tulsa to make themselves 6-6 and bowl eligible, then crossing their fingers the Podunk Bowl or something slightly more attractive invites them to play one last game. And don't even remind them when the 2014 Owls won at Tulane to finish 6-6 they were still spurned from the post-season.

WINS FOR TEMPLE'S CURRENT GROUP OF SENIORS, TIED FOR THE MOST IN SCHOOL HISTORY.

"We all want that extra game. It would mean the world," Taylor said. "When we were bowl eligible and didn't go to a bowl in 2014 I think back then we didn't have any credibility. I think we have credibility now."

Of course none of that will matter if they don't take care of business against the Golden Hurricanes.

"We didn't send the seniors out the way we wanted for their last home game on senior day," Collins said. "But the goal is still out there to send these seniors out the right way for their careers, the all-time winning-est class. Get them bowl eligible. We've got a chance to make it right next week traveling down to Tulsa ... I think everyone knows what's on the line next Saturday. Some other ramifications come with it."

Regardless of what transpires next weekend in Oklahoma, though it's still Linc-ed Out for the seniors.

"I think about all the guys who came here before me," safety Sean Chandler said. "I look up and see their names across the board. Hopefully one day my name can be one of those. What sticks out is we went through a lot of ups and downs here. Today was definitely a down point, but we'll try to bounce back. We still have an opportunity to get to a bowl game and win a bowl game. We haven't done that."

Tulsa comes first. Then it's wait and see for the seniors and all the other Owls who'll have gone 3-1 down the stretch to impress those potentially reading their resume.

Hoping that it's good enough to earn them one last senior hurrah.

Aries Get involved, travel, study and sign up for events. You'll be at the top of your game, and you should be intent on bringing about positive change. Raise your standards.

Taurus Don't feel you must follow the crowd. Watch to see what happens before you give in to something you are only partially interested in doing.

Gemini on't lead anyone on or make promises you won't want to keep. Speak from the heart instead of saying what you think others want to hear.

Cancer Accept change and you'll be able to move forward. Holding on to the past or doing your job using outdated methods will not help the people dependent on you.

Leo If something isn't working for you, make a change. Don't put up with situations that are injurious to your emotional, physical or financial health.

Virgo Compassion and understanding will be required when dealing with domestic situations. Cooperation will bring you closer to a solution involving children or elders.

Libra If you learn as much as you can, it will result in positive change, a new direction or a higher standard of living. Listen to experts, and share information.

Scorpio Think about what you have to offer, and find ways to use your skills and talents in ways that you've never done before. Your actions will not be forgotten.

Sagittarius It's up to you to bring about positive change. Good things will happen if you are forthright about your motives and ready to negotiate or offer incentives.

Capricorn Use intelligence to maneuver your way through situations. If you are too inconsistent, you will be met with a response that is equally unpredictable.

Aquarius Take better care of your health by monitoring your eating and drinking habits closely. Offer to help someone you'd like to get to know better.

Pisces Take one step at a time. Protect your assets and take care of your liabilities. Refuse to let anyone outsmart or outmaneuver you. Listen carefully. EUGENIA LAST
